WHY ENCOURAGE YOUR EMPLOYEES TO VOLUNTEER FUNDRAISE?

Volunteer-fundraising is recognised as the most popular form of volunteering in recent government research. While a donor gives money to a cause a volunteer-fundraiser generates that money as a result of their activities.

Benefits of employee volunteering include:

- better workplace moral
- staff retention
- improved leadership, decision making and communication skills
- team building

WILL VOLUNTEER-FUNDRAISING BRING OUR STAFF THE SAME BENEFITS AS OTHER FORMS OF VOLUNTEERING?

- Anyone who has organised (for example) an auction or golf day, will tell you that it requires strong organisational and leadership skills.
- Successful volunteer-fundraising events require effective communication skills for both internal and external audiences; many fundraising events need a crowd.
- The lone volunteer-fundraiser - preparing to run a marathon, for example - will develop in areas of personal time management, self motivation and problem solving.
- Volunteer-fundraisers tell as many people as they can to support their activity and are likely to take a very public pride in your company's support.
- Volunteer-fundraisers' impact in the community is every bit as important as that of volunteers who give time and skills; every volunteer minibus driver needs funds to maintain the bus.
- Volunteer fundraising is very flexible; staff can be involved with a charity over a week, month or year and still perfectly match the needs of the charity beneficiaries.
